

Means and medians: means are driven by extreme values.

The median is the value in a distribution that has an equal number of values higher and lower than it, regardless of how high or low they may be.

The mean is the arithmetic average of all the values in the distribution.

Therefore the mean goes up as there are more observations with very high values.

In comparing income distributions, the median income is often a more useful measure than the mean.

